One evening, when dressed for the character of Sir Brilliant Fashion, he strutted into the greenroom with the buckles sparkling on his shoes and a fine diamond on his fingers. A brother actor inquired if his gems were real. "To be sure they are; I wear nothing but diamonds," was the reply, whereupon Bannister re-marked: "I congratulate you, Bob, for I remember when you were nothing but paste." It May Be Done Now-How to Go

The failure or success of the young ree for the first two or three seasons after planting out depends largely on how this work is done. The young tree as it comes from the nursery row has been deprived in digging of probably half its roots, whose office is to supply nourishment to the top or to the branches and leaves. The supply thus diminished so considerably necessitates a rather severe pruning of the top, cutting away an amount proportlouate to the amount of roots or rootlets left behind in digging. This pruning should be done just before planting the tree, using a sharp knife. Cut away about three-fourths of the top, preserving a strong center shoot or leader, which should be cut back well. The lower lateral branches should be left longer than the upper, which should be pruned back rather severely. Any broken or injured roots should also be pruned so that the ends will be smooth.

in planting the tree in the ground set it no deeper than it grew in the nursery, which depth may be determined by the discoloration of the bark at the base. Let the roots rest on a bed of well-loosened soil. Replace the subsoil or c'ay at the bottom of the excavation with top soil, and let the excavation be somewhat larger than merely necessary to accommodate the roots. Fill in about the roots with pulverized soil, using the hand to perform the work. After the roots are covered tread the soll well with the feet. All the soil used for filling should be trodden down quite firmly. After the tree is planted stake it and tie to the stake, or better still, make a compact hard mound of soil about the base of the tree, to prevent the wind from whipping it about. In the spring remove this mound. During the first few seasons the young tree should be well mulched with manure or grass clippings winter and summer.

Fall planting of trees has one advantage, and that is the winter rains and melting snows have a tendency to settle the soil around the roots, and the tree is ready to start into growth at the first favorable opportunity in the spring. With many there is another advantage, and that is, the work is ont of the way in the spring, and work is usually pressing in the spring and at the very time transplanting should be done.

But if the planting is done in the fall it should be done as early as possible, although it may be done at any time before the ground freezes. When set in the fall, however, it is always a good plan to draw a little mound of earth up around the stem; to mulch well as soon as the ground freezes hard to protect against rabbits and so that your fields, gardens and orchards are safe against these goats. If a farmer or country gentleman wants to go into any kind of business that is new to him, he should try it on a small scale only at first, to get well posted in the new business, before he invests too much. The old saying, "by losses we grow smart," should not be forgotten; but we could "grow smart" much cheaper by being more cautious. They can easily be trained so that they come home regularly every evengora goat wants a rough, hilly, rocky Orme and R. F. Run Down Farms.

If every farmer realized what it costs in labor and money and precious time there would be fewer farms of this kind. Many people let things go down almost unconsciously. It is only, a little worse this year than last; last year it was only a little worse than the year before, and so the difference is not noticed. But if they would contrast things now with what they were five or ton years ago they would see that it would do themselves and the farm both a world of good. It is well for every man occasionally to ask himself whether his capital stock is going up or down. As a rule the poorer as consciously as his farm becomes neglected.
